Andreas Johnsen deals primarily with environmental law, construction law and building rights.

Andreas provides assistance to Danish enterprises, institutions and public authorities in environmental and construction matters, including in particular in connection with complaints as well legal and arbitration proceedings.

Andreas has experience in advising a range of players across the construction industry, including builders, municipalities, main contractors and design-build contractors as well as consultants. In his daily work, Andreas has gained profound knowledge of construction-law issues and provided advice spanning from contract conclusion and negotiation to risk management and dispute resolution.

Andreas focuses on creating value for clients through a hands-on and solution-oriented approach, and he often acts as a sounding board in connection with negotiations and contract management. Andreas is also experienced in alternative dispute-resolution methods such as mediation and judicial mediation, both efficient tools to solve disputes without a lengthy legal process.

In addition, Andreas has also been involved in project development within the building and construction sector. This includes assistance in connection with site purchases, financing, construction contracts and cooperation agreements.
